

BECOME A MEMBER

Of Fairbanks Climate Action Coalition

WHAT'S THE POINT OF JOINING THE COALITION?

FCAC is driven by people in the Fairbanks community who are putting in time, energy, & passion to move Interior Alaska towards meaningful climate action. Becoming a member is the way to show your commitment to this community! Our movement has been growing even as the need to halt climate chaos becomes more urgent, and we need to be organized & deepen our relationships more now than ever.

By signing up for membership, you become part of the climate justice movement in creating a sustainable and equitable future for Alaska. As a member, you can join others and contribute to our Coalition projects and campaigns while getting exclusive resources and engaging in opportunities for climate action, community gatherings, organizing training, and leadership development.

WHAT ARE THE STEPS TO BECOME A MEMBER?

Members sign up to be part of this movement, and align themselves with our principles and values. While there are no mandatory dues for FCAC, we encourage members to contribute how they are able – whether through monetary support or through donating time & skills. We are a member-driven movement, so we will share opportunities to get more involved, collaborate with community driven ideas, and support you engaging in a way that matches your capacity.

OUR VALUES & PRINCIPLES

JUST TRANSITION

FCAC is working towards what we call a “just transition”. This means that, as we move away from fossil fuels and other causes of climate change, we do it with fairness and make sure we look after people who will be affected by that change. We want to build an economy more in line with both our environment and our shared values in the process. Change can be disruptive. We must ensure workers in polluting industries like oil & gas are guaranteed opportunities for retraining and good jobs as we transition to a more sustainable economy, and that Alaska Native values and governance are respected.

COMMITMENT TO JUSTICE

Climate action isn't just about reducing emissions – it's also a matter of inequality and injustice. Climate change is creating drastic impacts for Alaska Native communities who have been least responsible for causing it. On the other hand, the scale of change required to avoid catastrophe is also an opportunity to make society fairer. FCAC is committed to standing in solidarity with movements for Indigenous rights, racial justice, and economic and social equality. We strive to advance climate solutions that center justice for Alaska Native communities, people of color, and working families, and help to build a fair economy for all.

COMMUNITY CONDUCT & CONFLICT RESOLUTION

We have an expectation of respectful and appropriate behavior from our members, leadership, and staff. As an organization that is bringing Alaskans together of many different ages, ethnicities, socioeconomic backgrounds, and political tendencies, we have a special responsibility to uphold a respectful environment and counteract unequal dynamics in society at large. As such, we take seriously a commitment to respectful conduct and principled conflict resolution as a baseline for building solidarity & a healthy community.

PRINCIPLED ORGANIZING

We also value principled organizing that endeavors toward systematic change and elevates power of communities that have been continuously oppressed. FCAC has adopted the Jemez Principles for Democratic Organizing. These principles were developed in 1996 by people and groups from different cultures, politics, and organizations. We ask that all FCAC members read, understand, and agree to these basic principles.

JEMEZ PRINCIPLES
