Letter from the Co-Directors

Dear Friends,

Each year when we put together the list of events for the Annual Report we are amazed at all that has happened at the Gloucester Writers Center. As you will see the past year was exceptional – Thank you to all the supporters who made it happen in so many ways - the writers, storytellers, listeners, volunteers, actors, students, teachers, board, staff and donors.

We took a quantum leap in October of 2015 when we became proud stewards of the Maud / Olson Library, featured in pages 3 - 7 of this report. To house the Library we expanded our “campus” by renting space at 108 East Main Street, down the street from GWC’s home base. We hope that you will visit soon.

We brought in new staff to help with our growth and expanded our administrative infrastructure in an intentional and sustainable way to support the future. The body of written work and recordings of the spoken word emanating from GWC events continued to accumulate – We worked on our new web-site and expanded our social media presence to keep more and more people informed and able to access our events online.

We celebrated Cape Ann’s Literary Legacy with a rollicking Cabaret based on the words of TS Eliot, Vincent Ferrini, and Charles Olson. We also celebrated the young writers in our midst with Poetry Slams, the Amiri Baraka scholarship, and working with youth at Gloucester High School and Pathways for Children.

We can’t do justice to the depth of our many programs in a single report. Each year we feature one or two specific programs or projects in the Annual Report - this year the newly acquired Maud / Olson Library. Please go to our website at gloucesterwriters.org to read more and to keep up with the latest news and upcoming events. As always, your feedback and comments are important to us.

How We Became Stewards of the Maud / Olson Library

The Maud / Olson Library came to Gloucester from Vancouver in October, 2015. It would not have come to the GWC without the single-minded commitment of GWC Board President and Director of the Maud / Olson Library, André Spears.

His friendship with Maud and his diligence in pursuing the collection helped realize Maud’s dream in bringing it to Gloucester after Maud’s death in December 2014. Book antiquarian and Olson scholar Gregory Gibson and GWC Co-Founder and Filmmaker Henry Ferrini went to pick up the Library in Vancouver on an epic road trip, recorded in the upcoming Film “The Door is Open: Charles Olson”.

The story of the Library began decades ago when Ralph Maud, scholar, writer, friend of Charles Olson, had the idea to create a collection of all the books the poet Charles Olson ever owned, read or referred to. André has written on the past and current history of the Library in a piece featured at gloucesterwriters.com entitled Maud, Olson and Me. Speaking on the genesis of his desire to bring the Library to Gloucester he says: “my interest, as part of the GWC, was in establishing an institutional foothold for a not-for-profit arts organization that would allow energies to coalesce around Olson’s work. In its own small way — in line nonetheless with Olson’s vision — the remarkable success of the GWC in the years since its foundation points to the fulfillment of a need for community that the focus on the art of writing provides. With the GWC’s growing success, it also became evident that the GWC was fundamentally well-positioned to accommodate Maud’s archival monument to Olson’s intellect.”

Developing the Maud / Olson Library

by Judith Nast

As a neighbor and an attendee at many GWC programs, I was delighted to be able to pitch in to help get the new Library in order. What began as a volunteer position helping reconcile the physical collection with the catalogue morphed into a project management position over a winter lunch at a local Chinese restaurant.

With the collection of books, periodicals, ephemera and reference books in a semblance of order, the work going forward was twofold. First, with Gregor Gibson’s guidance, plans were made to stabilize this library, that is, finding appropriate boxes, envelopes, pouches and book jackets to protect the oldest and most frail. Along with that came labeling materials so that finding a particular item was possible without opening each book to see Ralph Maud’s bookplate with his numbering system and comments. We’ve made great progress and that work continues with a terrific group of volunteers and interns.

The second focus of the work has been to identify an online cataloguing database product appropriate for this freestanding, small library so that not only interested people locally, but also scholars world-wide, can access its catalogue of books, images and recordings.

Jeff Johnson generously applied his knowledge and skills to take the existing word document catalogue and transfer it to a spreadsheet, a searchable transitional structure that can be easily imported into the database once it is chosen. As the collection is organized by author, the catalogue will give people the ability to search the Library not only for author, but for time period, location and subject matter.

My hope is that people will come to see and use the collection, sit at Olson’s desk and look out at the harbor. It’s a remarkable collection and I’m so glad that its home is here in Gloucester with the Gloucester Writers Center.
3500 Miles - 3500 Books

Driving Olson’s Brain:
A Dive Into the Maud/Olson Library
by Gregor Gibson

“The truly epic part of our journey didn’t begin until we got the books to Gloucester and began shelving and organizing them. That was when we began to truly comprehend the sprawling, gorgeous, deep, murderous, hilarious, inscrutable quality of Olson’s Brain.

Ralph Maud, the highly regarded academician and admirable Quixote, didn’t stop at obtaining copies of Olson’s books. He tracked down every original he could find — about 1500 of them survive, scattered in institutions across America and Canada — and transcribed the notes Olson wrote into the duplicate copies in his collection. Now the books in the Maud/Olson library bear tens of thousands of Olson’s annotations, exclamations and underlinings, transcribed verbatim by Maud from the Olson originals.

That task must have required thousands of man hours. How did he find the time? How did he push through the tedium? But even then Maud wasn’t finished. Inside the front cover of every one of the books in his collection, he pasted his Maud/Olson library bookplate. And on each bookplate he wrote a concise explanation of how Olson had used that particular book in his work — sometimes even citing the page numbers containing the material that Olson incorporated directly into one of his poems. Thousands more man hours, though probably not as tedious. Thank you, Ralph.

We enter that library now, and we are inside a poet’s brain, with this magnificent “Curriculum” for understanding him and ourselves arrayed around us like stars in the sky. We are curious, inspired. We interrogate Maud who interrogates Olson who interrogates the universe.”

Peter Anastas: “Visitors to the Maud/Olson Library — writers, scholars, and those who want to feel and see and hear what Olson experienced — will be able to sit at the head of that table, as Olson did each night, or each morning. They will have access to the more than 3500 volumes of Olson’s working library that scholar Ralph Maud replicated, just as if they were sitting in Olson’s own home. They will also have an incredible view of Gloucester harbor from that desk, through windows that bring the outside in, just as Olson looked both inwardly and outwardly while doing the reading and research that made his immense achievement, The Maximus Poems, possible.”

Summer hours:
The Library is open for visits from 1 to 5 on Monday and Wednesday afternoons from June 20th throughout the summer. Books can be read on-site.

Project Director Judith Nast is overseeing the cataloguing and developing the data base so that scholars world-wide can access its catalogues of books, images and recordings.

2016: The year of the archive
by Henry Ferrini

As a small non-profit begun in 2010, we hardly had a bookcase - now we are looking for a storage facility. The two major archives born over the last year represent a repository of history and a homecoming as well. André Spears and Greg Gibson worked together to bring Ralph Maud’s unique library to Gloucester.

In April of 2015 we worked with father and son volunteer team Rob and Ken Phlipot to bring Simon Geller’s WVCA archive online. For decades it was stored in damp boxes in my moldy basement. Now, WVCA.COM streams over 700 hours of Simon’s music to listeners all over the world. In addition, we have continued in our ongoing documentation of most GWC programming via podcast and Youtube that are accessible on the web and through social media.

What is the value of all this? Ammiel Alcalay said at our recent Gala celebrating the library that “It’s about resistance to throwing things out.” Not only books and papers but music, ideas, even people. Our throw-away culture runs deep.

Bemoan the present which assumes its taste, bemoan the easiness of smashing anything
- Charles Olson

Our work of preserving the past to enrich the present and better inform the future is manifest in all our work at the GWC. Our archives are key resources.
Education Programs

The Gloucester Writers Center offered a variety of classes and workshops during 2015-2016.

Ann McArdle’s Elements of Story and Write On! classes ran in the spring and in the fall, giving writers a chance to continue working on longer pieces. Ellen Szabo ran two one-day workshops, Saving the World One Word at a Time and Love and Apocalypse, as well as several memoir workshops. M. Lynda Robinson’s 10-Minute Playwriting classes continued to bring new stories to the stage.

Our community workshops continued to help many in our community find their voices. Dorothy Nelson’s Veterans Writing Workshop, offered in collaboration with the Gloucester Office of Veterans Services, ran in the spring and fall, culminating in a reading each session. A Group of One’s Own, a weekly writing group for women, offered a safe and supportive place for women to develop their writing. Mining the Hat, the weekly poetry group, explored various forms from Tanka to songwriting. The Working Waterfront Writing Group, offered in collaboration with Maritime Gloucester, helped draw out stories from the docks and the open sea.

The Gloucester Writers Center held two Write-On-Site workshops. They first met at Fitz Henry Lane Park and used the vantage point to focus on details great and small of the harbor. The second was hosted by Ocean Alliance at the iconic Paint Factory.

Bringing Poetry to Children

by Amanda Cook

This past year I have been bringing poetry into Pathways for Children, reading to preschoolers and helping them write their own poems. The idea was to open poetry up to them as a way to understand the world and to express their own ideas. I wanted them to know that their words and their ideas were important.

I began by reading to them — everything from Edward Lear and Shel Silverstein to Emily Dickinson and William Blake. We read poems about the seasons and the weather, about dragons and birds and mothers and fathers.

We read poems about feeling lonely and happy and angry and small. After reading we would write poems, sometimes as a class, sometimes individually. As the children told me their lines I wrote them down and read them back for accuracy. I would then read each poem out loud to them so they could hear it in its entirety and gave them their poems to take home.

As the children became more familiar with the idea their poems and their interest in poetry became stronger. One class listened to The Mermaid’s Purse by Ted Hughes, imaging each of the creatures in the poems. One little boy had me read all the William Blake poems I had with me, beginning and ending with “The Tyger” and repeating it in the middle as well. Their poems, which had started as lists of things they liked, started to focus on ideas and themes. As they became more sure of themselves the children began to take risks with language, using metaphors, playing with sounds, and enjoying the wonder of their own words.

As a July 2015 resident, Mike Boughn gave a wonderful reading from his recent work City. In addition he spoke to Charles Olson and The Thinking of America.

In August Ron Silliman read and spoke to a crowded GWC on Post-Anthropocene Poetics. The poet/critic has written and edited over 30 books, and his poetry and criticism had been translated into 14 languages.
Fifth Anniversary Celebration

The 5th Anniversary Celebration was held on June 20th at Maritime Gloucester. Over 250 people came together for buffet on the dock catered by Bonne Bouche Caterers and a cabaret under the tent titled Poets Cabaret II, a rollicking show in verse produced by Henry Ferrini, written by M. Lynda Robinson and Ann McArdle and directed by M Lynda Robinson.

The three famous Gloucester poets, Eliot, Ferrini, and Olson, are summoned by a muse to return from the dead. Local talents including Willie Alexander, Gordon Baird, Charlee Bianchini, Jo-Ann Castano, Rebecca Dowd, Henry and Isaac Ferrini, Brian King, Elizabeth McKim, Michael McNamara, Kate Tarlow Morgan, Sally Nutt, Lila Olson, Karen Ristuben, George Sibley, Sarah Slifer-Swift, Mark St. Pierre and Carl Thomsen comprised the cast.

Over 40 other volunteers helped to make the evening memorable — Thank you to all who worked and watched — over $20,000 was netted for the work of the Gloucester Writers Center.
Members of the Finish Line Writers Group continued to provide much needed help to GWC during the year, including event support, help with mailings, and creative gardening. Including volunteers from the Library Project and special events, over 100 people contributed time and talent to the GWC during FY 2016.

Advisory Board Member Kate Colby reads her long poem, I Mean.

Volunteers

During FY 2016 volunteers provided creativity, inspiration, sweat and labor as the GWC programs expanded. They worked during the course of the year to maintain the building at 126 East Main Street, prepare the space at 108 East Main Street to receive the Maud / Olson Library, help with mailings, put on the major fundraising event, digitize the Simon Gellar Tapes, help with the regular literary events, sponsor dinners, garden, etc. We furthered collaborative relationships with UMass Lowell, UMass Boston, Endicott College, CUNY, Maritime Gloucester, Gloucester High School, Cape Ann Museum, and Pathways for Children through events, shared presentations, internships, and visits to GWC by groups interested in Gloucester’s literary history.

2015 Amiri Baraka Scholarship Winner Spencer Taft reads at Fish Tales, produced by Maureen Aylward.

Governance
The GWC Board of Directors continued work with consultant Vicki Lindsay to establish the best of non-profit practices as recognized by the Boston Foundation’s Giving Common and GuideStar’s Charting Impact guidelines. Because of this work our basic organizational information, including up to date board lists, mission statements, financials, program information, tax information, etc. can be accessed at any time by going to the Boston Foundation Giving Common website and the GuideStar website and typing in Gloucester Writers Center.

André Spears assumed the presidency, Annie Thomas continued as Clerk and Brenda Hiltz of Anthony Dodge continued to serve as treasurer. We also added the office of Vice-President to the Board Leadership Team with Wendy Fitting becoming the first VP. Ann McCardle came on to help with bookkeeping and organization. In March of 2016, bookkeeper Andria Picano was hired to replace Ann McCardle who planned to leave at the end of April of 2016. Amanda Cook and Steve Brettlle worked hard to create the new GWC website which debuted in May, 2016. In February 2016 Judith Nast was hired to help with the organization and cataloguing of the new Maud/Olson Library as Project Director.

The staff expansion, funded by a large grant from the Belinda Foundation at the end of FY2015 is part of a two-year plan to establish the administrative infrastructure to ensure the productivity of GWC into the future. The Board held its annual retreat for a day of reflection and visioning in October. New board member Dan Duffy who has had years of professional experience in strategic planning led the board retreat in envisioning the future.

Thank You to the many donor who gave over 250 donations ranging from $5 to $50,000 during the FY 2016, amounting to almost $120,000 in individual contributions. You make the Gloucester Writers Center happen!
Financials
The combination of mailings, events, grants, and individual giving along with a large single donation to ensure the development of the Maud / Olson Library combined to produce another great fundraising year for the GWC.
