Introduction
& Welcome
On behalf of the International Society for Urban Health (ISUH) and the countless collaborators who made this event a reality, we are delighted to welcome you to the City of Atlanta.

The International Society for Urban Health (ISUH) is the sole global nonprofit organization working to bring together leaders from across academia, government, philanthropy, civil society, and the private sectors to improve health and health equity in cities and their surroundings, to achieve a healthier urban future for all people, in all communities, worldwide.

Introduced in 2002, the International Conference on Urban Health (ICUH) was the first, and continues to be the only, annual conference focused on Urban Health in the world. After 18 editions and a thanks to a network of more than 4,000 global urban health leaders, today the field of urban health has largely been established as an area of research, policy, and practical application. New and exciting discoveries are helping us to strengthen the body of evidence underlying the field and serving to underpin the decisions we make about developing cities that can support better health for all. Yet, too often, cutting edge urban health research and innovation is still being left in academic journals for theoretical discussion among peers, rather than being shared with policymakers and practitioners to be translated into impact that could dramatically change the lives of generations of urban residents. That is why, this year, we decided to focus on translating evidence into impact via cross-sector partnership and collaboration.

ICUH 2023 offers an opportunity to promote the generation, exchange, and application of interdisciplinary and intersectoral urban health knowledge and educational models, and to support the development of evidence-based programs and policies to improve urban health for all residents in all cities.

This year, we are convening hundreds of international experts to discuss the critical health challenges facing our cities across the world today and offering a variety of dynamic presentation formats that demonstrate the impact of health equity and social justice promoting interventions in urban environments of all types.

We are thrilled to bring our 19th annual International Conference on Urban Health (ICUH) to one of the most diverse, vibrant, and green cities in North America — Atlanta, USA, also known as the ‘City in the Forest’. In the face of innumerable pressing global health & humanitarian crises fueled by deep-seated racism, discrimination, tribalism, the impacts of climate change, food insecurity, political and economic instability, among others, we were steadfast in our commitment to bring this year’s event to a city that knows a thing or two about facing inequity. As the eighth-largest American metropolitan area overall, the 2nd largest majority Black metro area and consistently ranked one of the fastest growing metro areas in the country, together with a rich civil rights history, the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), and world class academic institutions, the City of Atlanta is sure to be a captivating place to meet and learn from each other and the city itself.

We are grateful that you’re joining us as we come together to consider the distinct challenges and opportunities that cities offer to advance health equity and social justice for all residents around the world regardless of race, ethnicity, age, gender, SES, or even zip code. Thank you for your vast contributions to the field of urban health and for building a healthier, more equitable world for us all.

This plenary aims to delve into the critical issues surrounding health inequities in urban settings. It seeks to unpack the complex web of social and economic determinants that shape health outcomes and how these are intertwined with structural racism and inequities in ways that result in profound disparities. The session will explore transformative strategies for promoting health equity, fostering environmental justice, and empowering overlooked populations. Participants will engage with ideas surrounding decolonizing knowledge and addressing unique equity failures in urban contexts, in an effort to spur integrated approaches and innovative partnerships to create healthier and more equitable environments for all residents.

MODERATOR

Tuesday,
7th November, 2023
This plenary is designed to be a platform where experts, policymakers, and stakeholders convene to explore the economic rationale for investing in environments that support better health and equity within urban environments. The session will spotlight diverse mechanisms, methods, approaches, tools, and processes capable of attracting both public and private sector investments, in terms of financial and human resources, to enhance health for all. In a world where downstream healthcare costs are becoming astronomical and crippling entire county economies, investing upstream in holistic disease control and prevention becomes paramount to our future. This plenary seeks to explore the hidden and often overlooked return on investment opportunities for cities and businesses to shape a future of collaborative initiatives to build healthy and equitable physical and social environments that benefit us all.

Plenary Session 3: One Life. One Planet. One Society—Leveraging One Health and Climate Action in Cities

Presentation type: Plenary
Locations: Midtown Combined
09:00 - 10:30

The plenary aims to explore the interconnectedness of human, animal, and environmental health through the lens of the One Health approach. This session will spotlight contributions related to using One Health as a comprehensive, integrated strategy for promoting health and sustainability within the complex interface of human-animal-environmental ecosystems. It will bring together a diverse array of research and practical experiences, showcasing how proactive climate action at the government, private sector and grassroots level can be harnessed to improve health, protect biodiversity, contribute to overall sustainability, and mitigate the impacts of climate change across various sectors, especially within urban contexts.

Plenary Session 4: Mind Matters—Promoting Mental Health and Wellbeing

Presentation type: Plenary
Locations: Midtown Combined
16:30 - 18:30

This plenary seeks to delve deeply into the complex relationships between urban living and mental health. The session will spotlight ways to enhance our understanding of how urban environments can either nurture or impede mental health and wellbeing. The plenary will emphasize the transformative potential of exposure to nature, nature-based solutions, physical activity, and social connectedness as tools for fostering improved mental health in city dwellers. By weaving together research, implemented projects, lived experience, and actionable strategies, this session aims to craft a nuanced, multidimensional perspective on mental health in urban settings.

MODERATOR
This plenary is designed as a vibrant and forward-looking forum that seeks to explore and champion solutions that integrate health, equity, and vitality into the fabric of communities through effective policy and planning. This session will convene government officials, community planners, developers, and other stakeholders to discuss and strategize how healthy, active, and equitable living can become not just a vision but a standard practice in community development. Here, participants will engage in dialogues aimed at advancing solutions that seamlessly weave health and community-driven equity goals into government policy, community planning, and development practice.

Reclaiming Your Community, You Don’t Have to Move out of Your Neighborhood to Live in a Better One

A Conversation with Majora Carter

Majora Carter, is quoted on the walls of the National Museum of African American History and Culture in Washington, DC: “Nobody should have to move out of their neighborhood to live in a better one.”

Her company focuses on reducing brain drain in communities like the one where she was born and raised. Her experience with strategies and projects to further restorative economic activity and community development projects provides hands on examples you can apply to communities you care about!

This is the opportunity to spend time with Majora to ask questions about how your local interests can be supported - wherever you live. So, take good notes during the plenary session and be ready to engage.

Breakout Session 23: ACE Project Storytelling Sneak Peek: Essential Insights from Master Practitioners [Accelerating City Equity]

Join us to watch documentary film clips featuring community leaders and long-time practitioners of equitable sustainable development around the world. We’ll discuss challenges, successes, and lessons learned and how they might apply to your work.

Moderator: Camilla Calamandrei

Breakout Session 29: ACE Sneak Peek at an Equity ‘Starter Kit’ for Practitioners [Accelerating City Equity]

Join us to discuss five building blocks for advancing equity as identified by the Accelerating City Equity Project. You’ll hear lessons learned from practitioners, and try out an exercise for identifying actions to advance equity in your work and local contexts. Moderator: Patrin Watanatada

ISUH Member Connect Meeting (by invitation only)

Join us for an opportunity to connect with other members and discuss local and national issues affecting Urban Health. This meeting is by invitation only.
Gil Peñalosa Master Class: Urban Health & Equity: Learning from 345 Cities

Description:

Urban Health is based on three pillars: Social, Natural, Built Environment, and their interrelations, and how they impact humans. Half of the urban homes that will be around in the lifetime of today’s children, does not exist. It’s a wonderful opportunity to do them creating equitable and sustainable cities, where everyone can live healthier and happier. They must be planned, built, and managed, radically different than past 70 years, when the result has not been good for the environment and mental/physical health.

Obviously, a priority will be tackling climate change. But cities of all sizes and wealth will also be focusing on competing for people, how to attract and retain the people that they want. As the world’s population growth comes to an end, already most of top 30 countries by level of ‘development’ have more people dying than being born. Their populations are decreasing, except those with large immigration. People that are good at almost anything, will be able to live anywhere; quality of life will become a most important tool attracting people.

At the start of the pandemic, Gil had worked in 345 cities, in all continents. He shared and learned from each. In this session he will share much of it.

All these issues depend on the pillars of Urban Health: social, natural, and built environment.

Breakout Session 51: Healthy Havoc: Infrastructure is Crumbling our Minds and Bodies

Written & Directed by Andy Boenau

We’re all at risk of losing our minds and bodies to the sedentary lifestyle that’s been forced on us. But our society doesn’t have to keep suffering this way. This is a film about the quest to fill a prescription for healthy living. It wasn’t that long ago in our history that people got mysteriously sick because they didn’t understand germs. Nobody washed their hands, ever. The subject of this film is on that level of importance. There are policies & practices that need to be washed away because of the constant sickness they’re introducing.

Americans are in a public health crisis that feels beyond our control. Anxiety, depression, loneliness, cognitive decline, heart disease, obesity, diabetes, cancer, chronic pains – these are all made worse by infrastructure that’s planned around the automobile. Trained experts of the built environment are not trained at all in how humans interact in the built environment. This documentary sounds the alarm about unhealthy infrastructure, provokes critical thought, and inspires people to band together to make their neighborhoods healthy and delightful places to live.

Embark on a transformative tour of Atlanta’s historic Sweet Auburn neighborhood, the birthplace, pulpit, and final resting place of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. This area serves as a living testament to the ongoing struggles and triumphs of black communities in the face of disinvestment, urban renewal, and systemic racism.

Our tour focuses on the intersection of food and equity, offering a unique lens to explore this iconic community. We’ll visit the century-old Sweet Auburn Market, a culinary landmark that has stood the test of time, serving as a symbol of resilience and community spirit.

We’ll also do a hands-on analysis of a public park, the John Wesley Dobbs Plaza, discussing actionable ways to transform it into a healthier, more equitable space for the community.

Your tour includes a delicious lunch at the Sweet Auburn Market, where you’ll get to taste the flavors that have nourished this community for generations.

Please email us at placemakingus@gmail.com if you have any dietary restrictions.

Join us for a journey that feeds both the body and the soul, as we explore the past, present, and future of Sweet Auburn.

Locations: Sweet Auburn
Wednesday, 8th November, 2023
15:00 - 16:15

Presentation type Panel

Recognizing the complexity of cities and their linkages to health, the World Health Organization (WHO) is committed to presenting a clear strategic vision for a coordinated and holistic approach to urban health. This workshop will be shaped around four cross-cutting policy areas essential to integrated urban health approaches by national and city-level decision-makers: 1) Observation and Analysis; 2) Governance and Financing; 3) Innovation; 4) Partnerships and Participation. These enabling factors are crucial to initiating, scaling up, and sustaining holistic action on urban health. The session will introduce integrated approaches to urban health and the four policy themes, featuring concrete examples and best practices from the global and regional experience of a diversity of WHO and its partners’ urban health initiatives and networks.
