Qiantang Treasure 钱塘之宝 53

Hong Mei Black Tea, Shochu, Framboise, Loquat syrup, Apple Cider, Ginger beer soothing, slightly effervescent and bright.

Qiantang river was a commercial artery that runs through Zhejiang into the East China Sea. Several tradesmen used this waterway to carry great treasures of Tea, Silk and Porcelain to distant cities. However, one of the best kept secret treasures of these tradesmen was this special brew which helped make the long trips and cold seasons more bearable.

Eastern Beauty 東方美人 46

Long Jing Green tea, Shochu, Pineau Park, Blackberry, Mint

fruity, with soft tannins and light berry notes.

It was once said that there were four great beauties in Chinese history: Xi Shi, Wang Zhaojun, Diaochan and Yang Guifei. These beauties were so impactful that they were able to change history with their actions and influence with Kings and Emperors. This cocktail teapot is based on an imaginary meeting of these women gathering one night to share stories of their experiences.

The Butterfly Lover 梁祝化蝶 58

Chrysanthemum Tea, Shochu, Aged Sake, Pumpkin Spice, Prickly Pear, Chinese Cinnamon

Floral, plush, full and round with baking spice notes.

One of the most famous Chinese folklores of a tragic love story, the Butterfly Lovers starts out with awkward ambiguity but evolves into eternal devotion. Liang Shanbo was shocked to discover his closest mate Zhu Yingtai was actually a woman in disguise. Tragedy allowed this couple to turn into a pair of butterflies, destined to fly together in the sky.
