GOOD Setting targets	GREAT Meeting targets	LEADING Exceeding targets
Baseline self-assessed and targets set for improved Māori and Pasifika recruitment.	Increasing rates of Māori and Pasifika being externally recruited to higher-paid, resilient, and senior jobs.	Has exceeded original targets in Māori and Pasifika external recruitment.
Has set population-based targets ¹ with timeframes to increase representation of Māori & Pasifika at every level of the organisation, including middle and senior leadership and governance.	Population-based targets are being met.	Population-based targets are exceeded.
Recruitment processes reviewed and revised to remove direct and indirect discrimination against Māori, Pasifika and other groups, e.g. to adequately attract Māori and Pasifika candidates, and to be inclusive of Māori and Pasifika potential and hidden skills.		Champions new and indigenous ways of recruitment and progression internally as well as to other employers.
Progression processes reviewed and revised to remove direct and indirect discrimination against Māori, Pasifika and other groups ² .
Analyse and report on progression within the workplace by a combination of gender and ethnicity.	KPIs for line managers to deliver equitable and fair promotion outcomes for all employees, as shown by outcomes for Māori and Pasifika progression. (see Organisational Culture and Capability – capability building for line managers).	Critical mass of Māori and Pasifika in management which makes hiring, progressing and retaining Māori and Pasifika staff easier.

¹Guided by relevant local working age population of Māori or Pasifika for underrepresented workplaces (usually white-collar); or set to reflect rate of frontline staff in more senior roles in Māori and Pasifika-heavy workplaces (usually blue-collar). See Toolkit for these population figures nationally and in regions across the motu.

²This should include specific proactive supports for Māori and Pasifika employees into upskilling, as well as de-risking progression, e.g. with secondment and acting-up trials (see Training & Development). Make progression routes explicit and well known across the organisation, including skills needed to progress (see Pay and Conditions)

Pay, conditions and benefits

GOOD

Setting targets

Pays at least the Living Wage, including for subsidiary workforce

Has used data on pay for ethnicity and gender combined to set targets for:

- · closing the Māori and Pasifika pay gaps.
- reduction of vertical segregation and horizontal ethnic-gender pay gap, especially through progression (see Recruitment & Promotion, Organisational Culture & Capability).
- · audit for equal pay (making sure different ethnic groups are paid the same for the same jobs).

Has Wage and Progression Strategy where progression is based on "transparent, skills-based and non-biased criteria"3. This includes making explicit to staff and well-known across the organisation, what skills are needed to progress to specific pay and roles, and the training pathways in place (see Recruitment & Progression).

GREAT

Meeting targets

Ensure equal pay for Māori and Pasifika staff, working the same jobs or contributing as much skill and value as others.

This includes reviewing pay through benchmarking, job-sizing and role reviews.

Take into account transferable skills gained outside of work or formal study, e.g. community work.

Reducing Māori and Pasifika pay gaps through career progression.

Publicly reporting Māori and Pasifika pay gaps by gender, using median pay data (not just averages/means), e.g. through Annual Report and the MindTheGap platform.

Improving analysis of real-world representation and pay gaps by understanding and using a wider range of methods e.g. medians and quartiles for pay and comparing to single-ethnic group NZ European male baseline for gender-ethnic pay gaps.

LEADING

Exceeding targets

Has closed the Māori and Pasifika pay gaps, including for women, through progression of Māori and Pasifika to more senior roles and appropriately recognising their skills.

Can connect Māori and Pasifika staff to wraparound social support (see Toolkit). Wellbeing support is provided for staff, e.g. wellbeing day, wellness room, mental health support such as Employment Assistance Programme, and mental health check-ins.	Health Insurance benefits, GP visits. Leave and other entitlements accommodate cultural and family needs of Māori and Pasifika (see Toolkit). Travel Allowance, or transportation service, free parking. Childcare allowance. Partnership with community-based Māori and Pasifika social service providers for wraparound support.	Profit Sharing or moves towards collective or worker cooperative or trust ownership that connects with Māori and Pasifika collective values.
Consider Mäori and Pasifika staff definition of close family.	Give minimum of 3 days bereavement leave for what would be considered "extended family" under the Holidays Act 2000 where the employee considers the family member to be a close family member, e.g. Aunt or Uncle.
Recognise and remunerate the cultural skills and expertise that some Māori and Pasifika workers bring to the workplace.	Specific paid roles are created for leading the organisation in Māori and Pasifika cultural spaces, so that additional unpaid 'cultural labour' does not fall onto Māori and Pasifika staff. Stakeholders and community groups (including whanau or other networks of employees) who provide input or cultural resources to the organisation are acknowledged and remunerated appropriately and not less than other contractors/guest speakers, etc.	Organisation champions, leads and innovates in sector-wide recognition and compensation for cultural services.

Training and Development

GOOD Setting targets	GREAT Meeting targets	LEADING Exceeding targets
Has established the baseline of Māori and Pasifika uptake of any existing training being provided inhouse or with standard providers and identified the possible level of underrepresentation.	Māori and Pasifika staff have participated in training for "higher-value jobs" at levels set by workforce representation targets (pop up definition needed).	Māori and Pasifika staff uptake of technical skills training for higher-value jobs exceeds workforce representation targets.
Has set target for Māori and Pasifika staff uptake of professional skills training for higher-paid pathways (specialist or managerial), e.g. a target for the rate of Māori and Pasifika participation in training, plus a target of the number of Māori and Pasifika people to be trained over a year.	Meeting uptake targets for Māori and Pasifika staff. Training is transparently connected to increases in pay and promotion, as part of overall pay and progression transparency standards (see Pay & Conditions [link to GEM Pay Toolkit section], Recruitment & Promotion
All foundation skills & industry specific training for Māori and Pasifika staff is done in paid work time, or they are paid for time spent training after hours (this could be universally applied).	All training and development opportunities happen during paid work time.	Longer-term paid study leave available and taken up by Māori and Pasifika staff, e.g. training over a week.
Training provision is culturally competent – especially in raising confidence among Māori and Pasifika staff to undertake further training and to progress.	Is delivering bespoke training for higher-paid skills-shortage roles and providing supported pathways post training completion. Māori and Pasifika graduates from these technical skills trainings are moving into higher-paid technical jobs.	Takes a leading role in collaborative pipeline planning with other employers in the same sector.

Young staff paired with experienced leaders and role models to offer mentorship and guidance as they enter the workforce.	Career development plans in place for all young staff within their first 12 months of employment.	Pastoral care and regular coaching available for young staff to complete career development plans and broaden early work experiences across the organisation, e.g. secondments, shadowing opportunities, training, and internships.
Has set up culturally competent Māori and Pasifika career-focused mentorship and peer-support that is taken up by Māori and Pasifika staff.	Mentorship network and support system maintains high participation and continues to be sustained and well-supported by organisation, supporting other training and progression outcomes.	Mentorship network and support system is connected to external networks to support overall Māori and Pasifika advancement in underrepresented professions and sectors.

Organisational Culture and Capability

GOOD Setting targets	GREAT Meeting targets	LEADING Exceeding targets
Establish baseline retention of Māori and Pasifika staff and set targets.	Meet targets for retention.	Exceed targets for retention.
Collects ethnic and gender data (on a voluntary basis) so the organisation can track equity progress and set targets. This should include coverage targets of at least 75% for ethnic data (including contractors, and current employees). 4	Has achieved at least 75% coverage of ethnic and other demographic data collection and continuing to improve coverage.	Has achieved at least 95% coverage of ethnic and other demographic data coverage and continuing to improve coverage.
Has an equity strategy that sets targets for Māori and Pasifika internal diversity, progression, and equal pay, and a plan for how to get there (see Pay & Conditions; Recruitment & Promotion). This should include Māori and Pasifika staff as part of the decision-making and leadership process	Senior leadership team takes the lead on delivering against targets for recruitment, progression, retention and closing pay gaps for Māori and Pasifika. Targets are linked to leader's KPIs.	Spreads good practice to other employers as a "Māori and Pasifika progression and equity champion".
Budget and staff allocation for diversity, equity and inclusion work with specific budget for Māori and Pasifika employment equity, including supporting paid leadership in DEI work by Māori and Pasifika staff.	Increased budget and staff allocation for diversity, equity and inclusion work, e.g. a full-time diversity officer for organisations with more than 50 staff.	Innovating in new standards for implementing diversity work in organisation, e.g. 1% of operational budget dedicated to diversity work, budget for incentivising DEI innovations.
Non-Māori managers voluntarily take up training in culturally capable management, provided by external trainers. This should also be available to interested Māori and Pasifika managers.	Increased voluntary uptake of cultural capability training by non-minority managers and staff, including training in how to best mentor and support Māori and Pasifika for career progression.
Promotes understanding of essential human rights & employment law in the workplace.	Has a safe and well-supported process in partnership with unions and other relevant advocates for employees to discuss, report and resolve discrimination issues, without fear of recrimination.

Setting targets

Implement a specific Te Tiriti o Waitanai commitment strategy throughout your business focussing on how your organisation will uphold Te Tiriti and tikanga Māori for employees, stakeholders and community. This strategy outlines your understanding of and commitment to Te Tiriti o Waitangi. When formulating this strategy, involve Māori in discussions first, then allow Māori to lead this space if willing, ensuring that:

- · Any Māori employees leading on Tiriti policies and tikanga are being paid for this.
- There have been discussions with Māori staff to remove assumptions that they will be willing to lead on tikanga or Tiriti policies
- · Māori staff are appropriately supported and not harmed by this journey.

Understand why it is important to connect culturally with Māori and Pasifika staff and create a plan to do so with annual targets.5

Ensure staff satisfaction surveys include questions that allow for a baseline to be captured on staff wellbeing and cultural wellbeing that adequately covers Māori and Pasifika staff.

The organisation focusses on employeeand community-centred design throughout the processes of designing and implementing the strategy, leaning into the shared knowledge of Māori employees, customers and other stakeholders (i.e. Mana Whenua), specifically compensating these groups for their input.

Compensation to external partners could include payment, but could also mean time, access, networking, development, representation or collaboration opportunities as forms of culturally valued reciprocity for Māori.

Employ a specific senior Māori cultural advisor/advisory team to build and implement your Tiriti commitment strategy, prioritising internal secondments or appointments first with appropriate support/training.

Tiriti commitment strategy is well understood by all within the organisation, including senior leadership, and honouring Te Tiriti is demonstrated day to day within your organisation. It is being added to and iterated on by all, not just by Māori or the team responsible for drafting and implementing.

Organisation leads sector on integrating and normalising Tiriti-led and tikanga Māori practices.

Workplace implements suite of outreach activities that can engage Māori and Pasifika workers' whanau/aiga and communities

Employs a specific senior Pasifika cultural advisor/advisory team to build and implement Pasifika strategy.

Cultural practices acknowledged, implemented or supported through HR/people policies are well understood by people leaders and other employees.

Wellbeing, including cultural wellbeing for Māori and Pasifika staff is improving, as captured in at least an annual satisfaction survey.

A senior Māori or Pasifika cultural advisor or DEI leader has oversight of analysis and reporting on Māori and Pasifika wellbeing data.

Organisation leads sector as a champion of effective cultural engagement and connection with Māori and Pasifika staff, which could include innovations such as implementing open, non-hierarchical and collective ways of working.

Wellbeing, including cultural wellbeing for Māori and Pasifika staff is at maximum, as captured in the annual satisfaction survey.

⁵This should include the creation of paid roles and/or formal platforms to channel the input of Māori and Pasifika staff into changing HR policies and procedures to better reflect their needs and culture

Ensure staff who are non-native English speakers are supported to fully participate in workplace processes, e.g. performance reviews, pay negotiations, disciplinaries. ⁶	Provide employment agreement and policies in Pacific languages to workers for whom literacy in Pacific languages is higher than in English.	Translate employment agreement and policies into Te Reo Mãori.
Managers have regular meetings with union delegates/union officials as a forum for raising any workplace issues and opportunity to work in partnership with the union.	Proactively working in partnership with the union.	Innovating and leading on devolving power to workforce, e.g. worker's cooperative or trust ownership (see Pay and Conditions) that connects with Māori and Pasifika collective values.
